Learning and Growth – Limud and Hitlamdut
As the people of the book, we approach everything as learners, internalizing the learning to build our capacity to do good. The goal of life is not comfort; the goal of life is growth and meaning. Every single experience we have had, and will have, can serve to teach us something - to make us great. Because greatness is not what happens to us, greatness is who we are in the face of what happens to us!

Courage – Azut d’kedusha
Courage is not the absence of fear; courage is the decision that something is more important than your fear. (Ambrose Redmoon) In Hebrew, “Azut d’kedusha” actually means ‘holy chutzpah!’ This country, and indeed our nation, was built on this very trait. As we seek to understand the benefits of this kind of courage, we might also tap into this powerful method for our own personal growth. We will also meet Michal Barkai, a social entrepreneur, who embodies this same trait, that Jewish women from our matriarchs to Golda Meir and beyond, used to fuel their journeys.

Can you examine the places and spaces that formed your personal narrative - a narrative that may still be valid, but may also have lost its relevance? How we frame our story will determine how we frame our lives and experiences. Judaism teaches us that re-framing the negative is a gateway to wisdom. Let’s look at writing our personal mission statements through the stories we tell ourselves and the stories we tell others.

Maintaining loving relationships require a commitment to peace and wholeness, an expertise in communication and in forgiveness. Love itself is a verb; an action word. In Hebrew, the word for love is A-hav-ah, which is from the root word ‘hav’ or to give. We love who we give to. This is why a child rarely loves a parent with the same intensity as a parent loves a child; because a parent gives and a child takes. Let’s examine the art of giving to master the art of loving.

Generosity - Chesed and Tzedakah
Acts of kindness and giving uphold our world. Are we holding up our end? When one begins to identify more as a soul and less as a body, it becomes clear that the ONLY thing we can truly keep is that which we give away. On Shabbat, a day where it is said that we get an ‘extra’ soul, our hearts yearn to give and do acts of kindness. This is why Shabbat is called 'a taste of heaven'.

Human Dignity – Kevod Habriut
Each person is made in the image of God, infinitely valuable and deserving of dignity. As human ‘doings’, we often ‘hustle for worthiness’ and connect dignity to productivity or fame or youth and beauty. A human ‘being’ is dignified simply because they contain a spark of the Creator. Our people have modeled personal dignity, even in the most horrific of times. The Jew is a living example of the expression "they tried to bury us, they didn't know we were seeds!"

Unity and Mutual Responsibility – Achdut and Areyvut
The story goes that two men were rowing a boat across the water when one man pulled out a drill and began boring a hole in the bottom of the boat. The other man turned to him in horror demanding, “What are you doing?” The other man replied calmly, “Don’t worry; I am only drilling under MY seat”. The Jewish people are called ‘Guf Yisrael’, the body of Israel. We are interconnected and, as such, must recognize our mutual responsibility. We are indeed 'in one boat' and that we are all interconnected and responsible one for the other. My story impacts your story and our stories make history!

Gratitude – Hakarat Hatov
An attitude of gratitude has benefits, not just emotionally and spiritually, but physically, as well. Even the word Jew comes from the tribe of Yehuda; the name given by Leah to her son when she realized that she had born most of the tribes of Israel. She was grateful to G-D and named her child for it. That name meant ‘gratitude’. We are a people of gratitude, as evidenced by the scores of blessings we make and by our very name. We acknowledge and appreciate the good in others, in ourselves, and in our blessings.
